

Tullar Elementary School Reading Week Lights, Camera, READ!

Reading Week at Tullar Elementary School has been going on for many, many years -- long before I started working at Tullar. Jan Koshalek works closely with the LMS to organize this even during the first week of March every year. This year, our theme was Lights, Camera, READ! We focused on award winning books and books that have made into movies. There were daily activities that are evidenced below in our schedule.

To kick off the week, Ivana Readalot -- a famous Hollywood actress -- visited each classroom and invited each class to participate in the week's activities.

iMovie of Lights, Camera, READ Answer Key.

Teachers dressed up as movie stars. During the week, students had to try to guess which teacher was which. This was an incredibly fun activity for teachers and students alike. This iMovie was shown to all teachers and students at Tullar Elementary School as the "answer key."

To encourage students to continue working toward their weekly reading goals, Ivana Readalot sent this special message via “satellite” mid-week. In actuality, I shot this at Roosevelt Elementary School using the laptop and the green screen. I uploaded the video to YouTube and shared with the TU Staff via email.
